10K YELLOW GOLD

Amethyst & Enamel Lavalier

A faceted amethyst · Seed pearls and white enamel

A lavalier is a pendant meant to fall in a long, narrow line at the throat — a little architecture of gold, named for the actress Eve Lavallière, and beloved in the Edwardian years for its lightness.

In that period, a single stone or a small motif hanging from a fine chain was a fashionable way to finish a neckline. Amethyst and pearls were favorite companions, and enamel could add a quiet gleam of white against the gold.

This lavalier is worked in 10k yellow gold. A faceted purple amethyst sits at the center of a diamond-shaped frame, with white enamel and four bezel-set seed pearls, and geometric openwork rising to a simple bail.

A small, purple accent, ready for a chain and a February birthday, or for a day that wants a little ceremony at the throat.
