Blue Topaz & Pearl Pendant

9ct · Openwork floral spray with articulated drop

Edwardian jewelers loved jewelry that seemed almost to float: open frames, fine gold, and a drop that could move as the wearer did. Lightness was the point — a pendant that caught the light and stirred with every step.

The fashion overlapped with Art Nouveau's flowing "whiplash" scrolls, borrowed from vines and tendrils. Flowers, pearls and a single colored stone were a familiar language: a little garden, worn at the throat.

This pendant is solid 9K gold, the bale stamped 9ct. An openwork oval holds a floral spray of split pearls around a bezel-set, oval-cut blue topaz; below, an articulated drop of a split pearl and a second, slightly smaller topaz.

A little blue, still in motion, for a December birthday or a chain you already love.
