CROWN & CURIOSITY

EDWARDIAN

Peacock Feather Lavalier

14K white gold · Blue sapphire & seed pearls

A lavalier is a pendant meant to hang with a little air beneath it: a bail, a short drop, and then the jewel itself, moving as the wearer moves.

This one is in 14K white gold, in open filigree, and is hallmarked 14K. The bail is worked as a peacock feather. Two seed pearls join it to a dangle, where a collet-set faceted blue sapphire sits among fleur-de-lis ornament.

It belongs to the Edwardian years, about 1901–1915, and might have been worn at the throat for an evening out — a flicker of blue and pearl against a dress.

A small flash of blue, hanging from a feather of gold — a jewel from another evening, now yours to keep close.

~ A curiosity, chosen for you ~

CROWNANDCURIOSITY.COM