TOWN CRIER

Cocktail Shaker Set

Designed by Bruce de Montmorency · Patented 1937

In the 1930s, a cocktail shaker could be more than a tool. This one was made to look like a bell, and to sound like one.

The "Town Crier" shaker and its six matching goblets were designed by Bruce de Montmorency and patented in 1937. The country of origin is the United States.

The set is chrome and walnut: a bell-shaped shaker with an internal clapper that rings like a real bell when the drink is mixed, and six goblets to stand around it.

A town crier, still ready to call the first pour.
